Appendix A

Q90. Religion

This appendix lists the country-specific response options for religious identity (Q90) in each country surveyed outside the United States. Respondents were asked about their current religious identity. In countries using phone or face-to-face interviews, unless otherwise specified, the response options were read aloud. Response options were tailored to each country.

In every country other than Australia:

- If a respondent said their current religion was “Something else,” they were asked a follow-up question: “What religion is it?” The interviewer then recorded their response.
- We recoded these open-ended responses for current religion into one of the following categories: Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim or religiously unaffiliated. All open-ended responses that are not recoded into these six categories remained in the “Other religions” category.⁹

In Australia, both web surveys and telephone interviews were used. Coding was completed as follows:

- All web respondents who selected “Something else” for current religion were asked directly on screen to “please specify.”
- All phone respondents who said their current religion was “Something else” were asked a follow-up question by the interviewer: “What religion is it?” The interviewer then recorded their response.
- We recoded these open-ended responses for current religion into one of the following categories: Buddhist, Christian, Hindu, Jewish, Muslim or religiously unaffiliated. All open-ended responses that were not recoded into these six categories remained in the “Other religions” category.¹⁰

Additionally, in Israel:

- Respondents who said their current religion was Jewish were asked a follow-up question: “How would you define yourself religiously?”. Response options included Haredi

¹⁰ Not all listed categories are included in our public dataset. For more information, read the section “In our public dataset” in this appendix.

(commonly translated as “ultra-Orthodox”), Dati (“religious”), Masorti (“traditional”), Hiloni (“secular”) or something else.

In our public dataset

- Instead of releasing country-specific variables for current religion, we are releasing three variables which recode the country-specific response options into broader categories.
- For each country, if the number of respondents who fit into a specific religious category is too small to report on separately (typically <100), these respondents are recoded as “Everyone else without sufficient sample size for analysis”.
 - religion_combined: Christian, Muslim, Jewish, Buddhist, Hindu, Religiously unaffiliated, Everyone else (including respondents who fall into one of the other categories, but their total number is too small to report on separately).
 - religion_christian: Catholic, Protestant, Orthodox, Everyone else (including respondents who fall into one of the other categories, but their total number is too small to report on separately, as well as all non-Christians).
 - religion_none: Atheist, Agnostic, “Nothing in particular,” Everyone else (including respondents who fall into one of the other categories, but their total number is too small to report on separately, as well as all religiously affiliated respondents).
 - Our religion variables use both closed-ended and open-ended responses. Open-ended responses are not released as recorded because of disclosure sensitivities.
 - The “Christian” category includes open-ended responses coded as “Christian,” as well as all respondents who selected any of the following country-specific, closed-ended response options (which also are listed in the “Country-specific response options” section of this Questionnaire): Catholic, Christian, Christianity, Christian Orthodox, Congregationalist, Eastern Rite Catholic, Evangelical or Protestant, Evangelical Lutheran, Iglesia ni Cristo, Jehovah’s Witness, “just a Christian,” Lutheran (Church of Sweden), Mormon (Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints/LDS), Orthodox, Pentecostal, Presbyterian (Reformed), Protestant, Protestant or Evangelical, Roman Catholic, the Protestant Church in the Netherlands and reformed churches, or Unification Church.
 - “Everyone else” is an umbrella category. It contains a wide variety of religions that have survey sample sizes too small to analyze separately. This includes Christians, Muslims, Jews, Buddhists and Hindus (all only when too small to analyze separately), as well as Sikhs, Jains, Baha’is, followers of African traditional religions or Native American religious traditions and others, open-ended responses that are not recoded into a specific category, and respondents who did not answer the question.

- The “Religiously unaffiliated” category includes open-ended responses coded as “Religiously unaffiliated,” as well as all respondents who selected any of the following closed-ended response options: atheist, agnostic or “nothing in particular.”
- For religion_christian, the “Catholic” category includes open-ended responses coded as “Catholic,” as well as all respondents who selected any of the following country-specific, closed-ended response options (which also are listed in the “Country-specific response options” section of this Questionnaire): Catholic, Eastern Rite Catholic or Roman Catholic.
 - The “Protestant” category includes open-ended responses coded as “Protestant,” as well as all respondents who selected any of the following country-specific, closed-ended response options (which also are listed in the “Country-specific response options” section of this Questionnaire): Congregationalist, Evangelical or Protestant, Evangelical Lutheran, “just a Christian,” Lutheran (Church of Sweden), Pentecostal, Presbyterian (Reformed), Protestant, Protestant or Evangelical, or the Protestant Church in the Netherlands and reformed churches.
